Out of your set of analogous colors, it is best to choose one that is more dominant than the others. This way the colors aren't trying to compete with each other for attention. For example, if you need to create a textile using red, red-orange, and orange, it may look best to choose the red-orange color as your dominant one and use the other two as accents.

Psychologists have documented that "living color" does more than appeal to the senses. It also boosts memory for scenes in the natural world. By hanging an extra "tag" of data on visual scenes, color helps us to process and store images more efficiently than colorless (black and white) scenes, and as a result to remember them better, too.
