675: The Salesperson Paradox, with Doug Vigliotti and Optimizing Daily Routines, with Bridget Gleas

The salesperson paradox directs performance. To improve selling performance you have to move away from selling into helping. It is centered on the customer. Doug contrasts that with self-centeredness. Humans are innately self-centered but focusing on your own needs doesn't serve the customer. Helping needs to be your first goal. The successful sales path is: help the customer, then make quota, then make money.
